1. A large meeting was held in Nanning on 14 February 1951 to commemorate the first anniversary of the signing of the Sino-Soviet Agreement. The ceremony, which was organized by LINING Jen-sheng (林任生), an administrative official of Kwangsi Province, was attended by Kwangsi military officials and Soviet and Vietnamese representatives. Col. R. Rhalivos, aka HUANG Ming (黄明) and Sergei S. Baikal, aka T'U I Hsueh-tseng (徐學盛), Soviet advisors in the Kwangsi area, had recently returned from a mission [redacted] where they had gone in December 1950.

2. KUINI Te-pao (桂德甫), a delegate of CHIPI Pao-chuan (和平川), an official of the Chinese Communist Government in Peiping, delivered a one and one-half hour speech stressing the necessity of an alliance between the armies of China and the USSR in order to be prepared for a possible attack from the "international reactionary forces." He also stated that the Chinese people must be prepared for eventual attacks on the territory of friendly democratic countries [redacted]. KUINI's speech was followed by a large demonstration in which about 20,000 people took part.

3. Ceremonies to commemorate the signing of the Sino-Soviet agreement were held in every province. At Lungchou, Kwangsi provincial officials organized a meeting at which Col. TUNG Chun-yao (董均耀) led a parade of 300 students of different nationalities from the Lungchou Military School. The marchers carried the flag of the school, a yellow star and yellow quarter moon on a red field, flanked by the Soviet and Chinese Communist flags. They were armed with various types of [redacted] weapons. The population of Lungchou appears to be more sympathetic to the Chinese Communist Government than the Chinese in the northern provinces.
